IN CAPTIVITY WITH THE MAHDI.

ESCAPE FROM DR. ORRIN.

SUFFERINGS OF THE PRIESTS AND NUNS.

THRILLING NARRATIVE OF FATHER DOMINI.

It is probably this man who drew up that document, now known to be forged, or at any rate some one forger the signatures, knowing what was in the body of the letter. We were now handed over to him, and he took us to his hut. It was built of diorite stone, and enclosed round about. We dwelt here two months, keeping inside always, for we knew that the devils sought occasion to slay us.

Our situation became extremely wretched, for to lay outside, dirty, and naked. Our privations were great, for the Mahdi took no further care of us. We were in dirt, with hardly enough to eat. One dayman came to this treatment, and died of slow fever, and shortly afterwards two sisters sickened and died. Poor creatures, they too sank gradually, the fever had entered into their souls. They succumbed under a horrible dread, they were famished and naked. "God will not permit it," but take now these ten shillings, buy with them whatever you may need. Here also is raiment wherewith you may clothe yourselves. It is not forbidden for you to go to and fro about the market. I have given orders that no man shall molest you; but you are always when outside, to wear Moslem garments." And now the man had arrived when the garrison of Omdurman had resisted all assaults so gloriously, were compelled to surrender, being on the verge of starvation. Their sufferings had been terrific. The little corn there was sold at an enormous price—2,000 dollars an arabic. Eggs, though they were seldom to be got, were sold for a shilling each. The men had become gaunt-looking, walking skeletons, with their bones showing through their skin. If any was killed or died there was none to bury him. The arms of the survivors were too weak to dig a grave, though the corpses lay rotting. Each day lent new horrors to the scene. Men dug up buried carcasses of dogs, ducks, and camels; others stripped the leather from the [native] dead, on which the mattress is supported by thongs of leather transversely drawn across and attached to the woodwork. These things they would soften in water and then eat. The live dogs were killed and cut up; even the tail would fetch 20 shillings, and the head and entrails much more. Dogs were treated in the same way. Others were shot, and their heads and entrails eaten. The grim and ghastly sight to be seen in that beleaguered city were
